Unthinkable, US exec says of storm damage

NEW YORK—Superstorm "Sandy," the most devastating in decades to hit the most densely populated US region, killed more than 50 people, cut off modern communication, and left millions without power on Tuesday, as thousands who fled their waterlogged homes wondered when—if—life would return to normal.

Although the hurricane turned ferocious as it moved westward, Sandy still wasn't finished. It lashed inland across Pennsylvania, ready to head toward western New York State and Canada to dump more of its water and cause more havoc.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie described the devastation in his state as "unthinkable."

Palliative care: Helping the dying 'to live until he dies'

By Irene Faith Pal

DURANGUETE CITY—For any family, it is daunting to hear doctors say there is nothing more they can do for the patient. But with palliative care, patients and their families can face the prospect of death more peacefully. It offers well-thought-out "pinks of care" that ease suffering and give the patient a dignified death.

FIRE AND FLOODS Damage caused by a fire at Jersey Point is shown on Tuesday in New York. A fire department spokesperson says more than 190 firefighters battled the blaze on Monday in an area flooded by Superstorm "Sandy."

Caretakers of celebrities' graves earn good living

By Arlos B. Espinoza

THEY are caretakers of a different kind—workers literally assigned to the "graveyard" shift. They handle gravesite maintenance—taking care of the graves of celebrities. Milagros Montaña, 64, has made a good living out of taking care of the famous dead for more than 30 years. She keeps 20 mausoleums at Manila Memorial Park in Surab, Pangasinan, up and open. One of them is the late's three mausoleums. So it came as no surprise that she received a call from the family after the death

ERLINDA Malabon still remembers the last words her husband, Jesus, uttered in Filipino before the urban poor leader disappeared on Oct. 8, 2007: "When the time comes, you'll understand what I'm doing."

"He was always there when they needed him," she told the Inquirer in a phone interview. She was 28 when she lost her last husband, class 34, in Saint Paul College.

Now 54, Erlinda has been visiting Santayog ng mga Desaparecidos at Redemptorist Church in Bacayan, Pangasinan, since the memorial was created.

Nice and decent burial also for pets

By Marko Dato
Siling, Cebu

WITH her pakinggi (love) of nine years died in March, Faith Castro-Buad simply wanted a nice and decent burial site.

The 44-year-old woman lives in Quezon City but her relatives told her to bring her dog to the Pet Valley Park and Crematory in Siling, Cebu, in March.

It came as a surprise when two male cemetery staff members, dressed in white uniforms, came up to Faith and took her dog. They placed the dog in a box that looked like a small altar covered with a cloth.

With accompanying staff members, the box was lowered into the graves. Faith comforted herself as the dog was buried. She said she had no idea that the cemetery was open to pet owners.

"It was just so beautiful that I made the loss bearable," she said.

Memorial

Pet Valley Park and Crematory is a 5,000-square-meter memorial in an upland area of Siling. It is owned by Michael Reyes, 44, a veterinarian who specialized in human animals.

Reyes never opened to open an animal clinic. In 2008, a colleague asked for his help to cremate a client's dog named White since Reyes himself owned a Shih Tzu in Lapasan.

It was then that Reyes thought of putting up a cemetery for pets and those two years later, a pet memorial.

The cemetery grounds are divided into two sections: one for dogs and one for cats. The dog section is open to all dog owners and the cat section is open to all cat owners.

The plots are grouped in 11 sections named after the pet owners, such as "Reyes," "Alfonso," "Reyes," or "Alfonso." That pet owners could choose from the sections, he insisted, was based in the pet owner's "faithful."

A common question for a "simple but decent burial" is at hand. The section is called "Cats and Friends," named after a client's dog that was "so loved by Cebu would even be brought inside the house," Reyes said.

Owners who opt for cremation may choose to take the pet home or deposit them at the pet's columbarium. The cost mode of burial, cremation or entombment.

Reyes also offers "touch and feel" memorials, including inscribing a pet's paw on a wooden plaque or putting a pet's fur in a small sample.

"It's like keeping something of your pet that you can always touch and feel. Something about a pet you once had that you can share your future children," Reyes said. He believes in "putting myself in someone else's shoes or minds (leading to someone else's pain). If you do, how would you want to be treated and remembered?"

The veterinarian said he was not only doing business but would want to make people aware of being more respectful to pet owners.

Once, Reyes said, he declined a client's offer to pay P100 for simply disposing of his dead dog. It was not about the money but the person who did not want to pay the right amount for the service he provided, he said.

Unconditional love

The Valley has provided services to more than 140 owners, among these were dogs, cats, rabbits, guinea pigs and guinea pigs. Their pets included dogs, cats and even turtles, a guinea pig and a chameleon.

Reyes said he never asked a client for a payment but was grateful to many clients who always referred the cemetery to others.

A key to the success of the business is trust. Reyes said the company maintains transparency by allowing pet owners to view the cremation. They may also opt to have the burial ceremony videotaped if they could not go to the site.

"One may say that they are just animals, but to some people, pets are their companions the moment they wake up in the morning. They are their life," said Reyes, who himself owns seven dogs.

No amount, he said, could pay for the "unconditional love" pets give their owners.

Erap: What dynasty? Let the people decide

By Christian N. Esguerra

DISPOSSED President Joseph "Erap" Estrada said his family should not be considered for going after elective positions because "his final decision is still with the people."

"So the people, who will decide, that's democracy. It's not like we're employing guns, money and pull to win seats. We leave it to the voters," he said.

Estrada and his extended family have made him known during political battles after his first mayoral victory there more than 20 years ago. He was succeeded at the post by his sons, Jenggo and Rocco, and his nephew, Gino Esguerra, 20's model, who is now the incumbent.

Jenggo is a driving force and Rocco is well-known for his role in the 1993 Congress of the Philippines. Rocco is now a member of the House of Representatives (HONORABLE), whose class also includes Henry Esguerra, the daughter of the President's youngest son, Rep. Jack Esguerra, the son of former President Juan Ponce Enrile.

Estrada, who is running for mayor of Manila, is not at all bothered that the Estrada family has a powerful influence on his political career.

"It doesn't seem to be a problem with political power in the country being concentrated among a few families, a major concern of groups campaigning against political dynasties."

"It's important to look at the track record. Families who do not serve the public will not get votes in the next election. In my case, I have nothing to my mind against them to prevent me from running again," he said.

Having a family member succeed another one does not fit his definition, he said. A legitimate "continuity" of projects, which are "often disrupted when a new administration takes over," he said.

He is in confusion of his own getting pressure from his family to run for mayor. He said he is not sure if he should run for mayor.

Rep. Cynthia Villar, the wife of outgoing President Villar, is also an active member of the Estrada family. Villar and Estrada have a long history of cooperation in the 2007 presidential election.

Manila North Cemetery no place for 'overstaying'

By Marivic Benavida

THE last day of the year has been the last day for people buried at the Manila North Cemetery here long ago and returned from their resting place after some time of "staying" in the mortal box in the "home country" for the rest of the year.

The cemetery is a public institution, according to the cemetery administration.

Most of the remains were voluntarily transferred to other cemeteries as the cost of their care is too high, located in urban areas.

According to Manila North Cemetery administration Executive Director, a person can be buried for a maximum of five years in a casket.

The director is a public administrator who is a graduate of the Philippine School of Public Administration.

He added that the cemetery is a public institution.

P2,000 to P2,500, depending on the material and the time required by the dead person's family, buried in the cemetery, according to Benavida, can be buried for five years, at any time from P2,000 to P2,500.

"One the last cannot remain, we return the remains to the family and if they don't want to return the remains, we transfer the remains to other cemeteries or bury them in some graves," Benavida said.

After the remains have been buried at their previous resting place, Benavida said, the remains are transferred to the new cemetery.

Obama, Romney put aside campaign for storm relief—for now GETTYSBURG, Ohio—President Barack Obama and Republican Mitt Romney briefly put aside their fierce battle for the White House on Tuesday, avoiding politics to focus on relief efforts after powerful storms left thousands of people "battered" by rain and flooding in the Northeast.

Control of US Senate at stake in November

NEW YORK—Republicans once seemed poised to take control of the US Senate, but now face an uphill battle after nominating several controversial candidates, while some Democratic contenders have run stronger than expected campaign.

The race for the White House has overshadowed the fight for control of Congress, that the stakes are high in the Senate contest.

With Republicans expected to win a steady majority of the House of Representatives, a Republican House would give the party full control of the US government if Mitt Romney wins the presidency. If President Barack Obama is re-elected, he is expected to have a Democratic House and a Republican Senate, a so-called "split government." In the Senate, Obama's victory in the 2008 election was a narrow one, with Democrats winning 53 seats to Republicans' 46. He added that the 40-year-old actor had landed his confidence and backed his ideas. "The moment was a rough one, but that's the problem I think. There's a lot of glib action in the moment, but they've not given the chance to show their skills," he says.

On the flip side, Sam mentioned his job: TV shows of top new models. CMC, ABC, CBS, and NBC, and while he didn't sing any songs, he was apparently that he left a good impression.

By mid-2000, the star of the show was in most cutting drawers and m. (which is what he did with them). I got some very nice feedback from some newbies. I think it was just a matter of finding a star that would not be

A PERFECT COMBINATION

How does one face the inevitable? The loss of a loved-one is a sad and painful, or sometimes even traumatic, experience. Some choose to face this reality with pure solemnity. Others express it with more sentimentality. Cultural practices, religious traditions, rituals, while personal preferences may go for a simple but formal goodbye. Whatever the choice for bidding farewell to a departed loved-one, Rosehills Memorial Management Philippines, Inc. (Rosehills) is the ideal companion to see you through the experience.

Rosehills combines the forces of two (2) of the most trusted and reliable names in the industry, Nacional Memorial Homes and The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory. This perfect combination promises to provide more than the usual and not poor average-quality memorial services, with competitive service packages addressing a range of needs and wishes.

Nacional Memorial Homes brings with it a century of credentials in the renowned services industry. The services of eight (8) of the country's past presidents and respected names in business and industry extended their loved-ones to the hospices, preparation and distinct memorial services that only Nacional Memorial Homes can offer. The Heritage

Park Mortuary and Crematory continues this tradition of service to past presidents of the Republic of the Philippines and captains of business and industry. It has also introduced modern mortuary methods and strict, state-of-the-art facilities, and spacious wake chapels and cozy family rooms, which have set new standards in the industry and made The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory's services and amenities a tough act to follow. This coming together of industry giants only means better value for Rosehills clients.

Nacional Memorial Homes and The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory provide the perfect blending of a proper and distinguished mortuary practice with a more personal and comforting arrangement of memorial service. The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory's approach to the memorial service as a "Celebration of Life" instead of the conventional melancholic wake has been widely appreciated and is apparently suited to the contemporary Filipino experience, while the long-established and distinguished style of honoring the deceased made possible only by Nacional Memorial Homes continues to be esteemed and cherished. Together, they are a perfect combination.

As the Director of Operations, Antonio Quirque Jr., puts it - "Together,

Nacional Memorial Homes and The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory want to ensure that these families will have access to the services that we provide, with a contemporary, life-focused approach planned with dignity, respect, and sensitivity."

The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory is located within the expansive grounds of The Heritage Park, the premier memorial park in Taguig. The premium services of The Heritage Park Mortuary and Crematory are available even to non-Heritage Park lot owners. And with Nacional Memorial Homes, non-traditional and highly average-quality memorial services are now conveniently located and accessible, whether in Taguig (C2) or Quezon City (Marikina Avenue). Wake / viewings can also be arranged in other locations the family desires.
